Have you asked
yourself how good your resume is?

Or what's the point
of a resume?

1.	Your resume aims to get you an appointment for a job interview
2.	And if you get an interview date that means your resume has done its job to reach your goal, and your resume is strong and excellent
3.	But if you don't get an interview invitation, at this point I invite you to review your resume and make sure it includes the required data

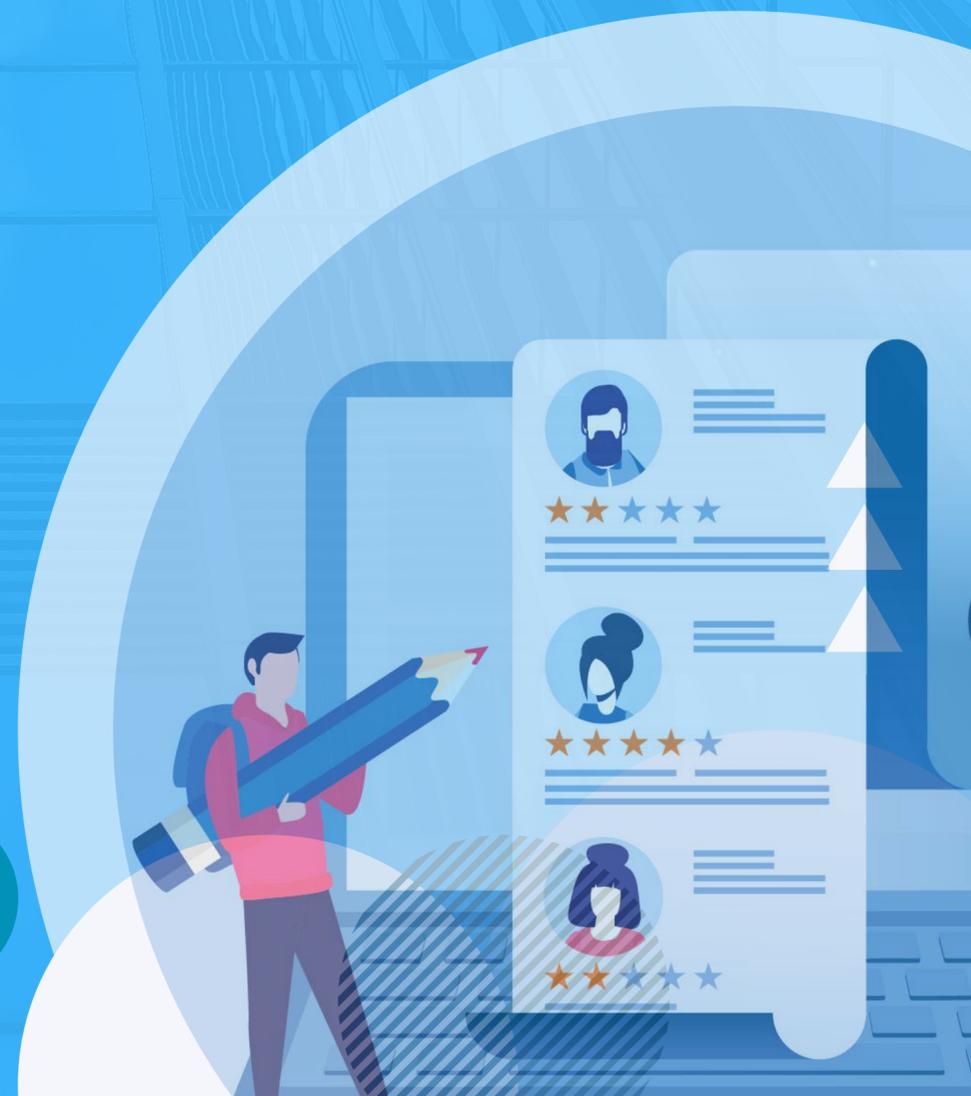

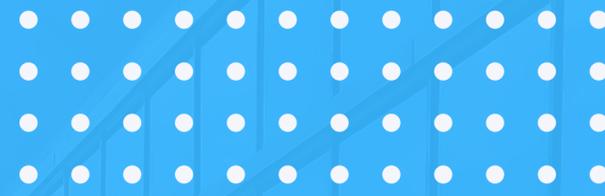

Well, what data is required in your resume?

Your Resume data should contain metrics and numbers if possible

Use numbers that determine
a specific measure
of an activity like a percentage of profits or a certain
rate of success

Well, what to focus on in your resume?

In your resume,
focus on the results you got more than listing
the duties and responsibilities

S&H

Because recruiters want to know more about your performance or how you helped your employer, and what your achievements are.

Example:
Sales grew by 90%,
or your newspaper
articles reached 220,000 people
views per month.

Such sentences are more impressive
than just saying that you were in charge of managing the company's newspaper articles.
